Customer Reviews

Rebecca Haas has created a great resource for every parent of preschoolers. As an expert speech pathologist, she has taken a complex topic and created a useful tool that will help the rest of us work with our children and grandchildren. My children are grown, and I read this book with the intent of working with my grandchildren. I love the idea of 52 lessons - one for each week of the year. Each lesson offers practical guidelines about things we do every day. She offers general tips and then activities to be used to help your child improve his/her speech. Thanks for making a challenging task something any parent can accomplish.

Very helpful for organized at home work with your toddler. Not with the intention of replacing professionals. Easy to read, simple to apply.

I honestly could get the same level of info from a Buzzfeed list of tips on getting a child to speak. Not in depth at all and if you've ever googled "why isn't my ____ month old talking" or "late talkers" then you know all of this anyway. Waste of my time and $4.

A truly comprehensive guide that covers everything a parent might need to help their child build strong language skills. My favorite tips include speaking with "clear words," using everyday activities to spark discussion, and "waiting" for the child to respond. The author provides numerous tips, links, and resources, along with a FREE Toddler Speech and Language Kit. I received a copy of this book in exchange for an honest review, and I am thrilled to give it a big thumbs up!

Wow, what an excellent book to help any parent with a child who may be struggling with their speech. I sure wish this book was available when my oldest child was 4 years old and she could not pronounce her g, r, or k sounds. Talking with Toddlers provides a list of tips and activities that you do with your child at home. If I would have had the knowledge given in this book maybe my daughter would not have needed weekly speech therapy for a year. Thank you Rebecca for taking your time to help others with your expert knowledge as a Speech-Language Pathologist.
