Little Lotus And The Loving-Kindness Cup

Synopsis

Little Lotus's school is having a recycling contest, and the winning class gets to keep Eagle Peak Elementary's golden loving cup for a whole year! Lotus is determined to win the glory for Room 8, Miss Jewel's third grade class, but she must choose between doing the right thing for the environment outside, or the environment inside. After falling into a smelly dumpster, things seem pretty bad, but when Samantabhadra Bodhisattva arrives with a special teaching for her, she discovers the true meaning of success. This charming chapter book for children with a Buddhist main character has an inspiring moral message while being entertaining reading for families to experience together.

Susan Tidwell was born in Roseburg, Oregon but has moved many times, including to California, Alaska, the Netherlands, South Africa, back to Oregon on a commune, Hawaii, Virginia, Iowa, and Florida. A graduate of the College of Education at the University of Hawaii, she has taught high school English, art, and physical education in Hawaii and California. A competitive fencer while in college and the first female to be formally recognized as a U. S. Military Fencing Prevost, she has also shared her interest in the sport with youths and adults alike. Wishing to harmonize her interests in Buddhism and education and to help promote universal understanding and appreciation between the East and the West, she writes (and sometimes illustrates) Buddhist-inspired books for children. She enjoys traveling, drawing, and reading, especially Western and Chinese classical literature.
